

It's absurd that the same group of stations that refused to air the Nightline remembrance of fallen soldiers is now doing this. This company should be the one being sanctioned, rather than wasting your time fining people over the Superbowl.

This is an egregious violation of the whole purpose and intent of the media. If you don't stop them from doing this, what's to stop them from broadcasting false messages about polling locations being closed, reporting false information about the outcomes in certain states, or just give Bush a 24-hour marathon of campaign ads on Election Day? This is the exact type of issue that wouldn't need to be addressed if you didn't support companies' attempts to take over huge swaths of the "free" airwaves.

With companies like Sinclair and Clear Channel controlling everything we see and here, blatant censorship and favoritism is a foregone conclusion.
